Riots

The riots that had started in 2020 had gone down to history. One of the most common issues in the U.S is racism and inequality against African American people. The BLM protest was not just a protest but also people wanting peace in the country.

Systemic Racism

We live in a society with systemic racism. Black people are being killed by this so called force that's suppose to be protecting and serving us. The only thing that civilians can do is protest, the people's voice matters, and it can change everything because the people come first.

Bias

Race is still a determining factor in our social structure both inside and outside of the U.S. Blackmen and violent crime is paired together because of implicit bias. Everyone's biased.

Race in America

“Trump has banned Muslims because they’re Muslims, he poured fuel on every single racist fire, and started off his new campaign talking about, he’s going to get rid of the Mexican rapists,” says Biden. A 14 year old boy got shot because he was out late in the night, cop said she thought she pulled out a taser.

African American deaths

There has been many African American deaths in the U.S. The main death that was held during 2020 was George Floyd. An innocent man who had a family. As others gathered around to protest, this country is still fighting for their freedom.

Being hopeful

The country is weaker, angrier, less hopeful and more divided than it was four years ago, but they will never stop until they get their freedom. There's segregation in certain races. Ever since slavery, black people were known as not citizens.

Police violence

Police violence needs to stop. They swore and oath to protect the people but they end up being racist and ruining peoples lives. It is an extreme form of police misconduct and or violence and is a civil rights violation. It is also a situation where officers use excessive force against a person for no reason, which is also a violation.
